

Medical Absence and Examination Eligibility Annex

Purpose. This synthetic annex describes a special medical-absence process for demonstration purposes. It is intended to test whether a rulebook assistant can find a rule that appears several pages away from the ordinary attendance rule.

Students seeking medical consideration should submit the required evidence through the department process. The evidence should identify the period affected and should be sufficiently clear for the reviewing authority to make a decision.

Medical consideration is not automatic. The reviewing authority may accept the evidence, request clarification, or decline the request when the documentation does not establish the claimed period.

An approved medical absence can affect the academic record in the way stated in the decision. Students should keep the decision because later examination processing may depend on it.

**Evaluation clause A.4:** For students with an approved medical absence, examination eligibility is retained at **65 percent attendance****.

Medical Annex — Continued

The 65 percent sentence above is intentionally inconsistent with the ordinary 75 percent attendance rule in the main handbook. The project is expected to surface both passages rather than silently choose one.

Students who miss an examination because of a medical emergency should report the event to the invigilator or examination office as soon as reasonably possible. The examination office may require a separate form.

Medical evidence does not establish rules for non-medical events. Family celebrations, travel difficulties, employment commitments, or ordinary timetable conflicts are not converted into medical absence merely because they prevent attendance.

Where an exception is granted, the written decision should identify the course, period, and academic consequence. A general medical certificate without an academic decision should not be treated as a universal waiver.

Students who need clarification should contact the department office. The assistant built for this project is not an authority and should never invent a policy that is absent from the corpus.
